“Jennifer’s track record in California’s challenging employment litigation landscape makes her a terrific addition to our team,” said David W. Garland, Chair of Epstein Becker Green’s National Employment, Labor & Workforce Management Steering Committee. “Her ability to secure favorable outcomes in wage and hour class actions and PAGA matters, combined with her deep understanding of California’s difficult regulatory environment, improves our capacity to deliver creative defense solutions for clients facing the state’s most complex employment challenges.”

McGeorge focuses on defending employers in wage and hour class actions, PAGA representative actions, and single-plaintiff claims involving discrimination, harassment, retaliation, wrongful termination, and breach of contract. She has secured numerous favorable verdicts and decisions as first-chair counsel in trials, arbitrations, and California Labor Commissioner hearings, and has successfully opposed class certification motions and decertified wage and hour classes. Her experience spans diverse industries including security, senior living, manufacturing, construction, transportation, insurance, hospitality, and professional services.
